

Encyclopedia of Governmental Advisory Organizations

Now online on Gale Directory Library

Now Available Encyclopedia of Governmental Advisory Organizations profiles more than 7,600 permanent, continuing and ad hoc advisory committees of all kinds reporting to the president, congress and various other United States government departments and agencies. Active committees are emphasized but information on historically significant organizations that are no longer functioning, as well as some that were authorized but never activated or funded, are also included. Important regional and interstate commissions of broad public interest are also represented.

Entries cover advisory organizations in a wide range of fields, from business and industry, to education, science, the arts and professions. Descriptive listings in Encyclopedia of Governmental Advisory Organizations typically include full contact information, including address, phone, fax, E-mail, Web URL and homepage; designated federal employee; history; programs; findings/recommendations; members; staff; subsidiary units; publications/reports; meetings; and a remarks section for additional information which does not fall into the scope of these standard categories.

Real-world applications might include:

- Business professionals can identify advisory organizations in business and related fields, compiling a list of detailed contact information
- Graduate students in science can quickly compile a list of advisory organizations that focus on specific subjects in science and technology
- Historians can locate resources and publications of historically significant advisory organizations
- And many others
