

Raising the bar for legal research at the law library

When it comes to supporting law school curricular and faculty needs, your law librarian often plays the role of personal research consultant. We are staffed by highly-trained professionals with considerable knowledge of the latest print and electronic information sources. Likewise, our diverse backgrounds and experiences have been ideal preparation in helping faculty members achieve their research goals.

We invite you to look to your law library first for all your research needs. With hundreds of thousands of print volumes, the breadth and depth of our resources is impressive. Rich and varied and easily accessible, our collection is comprised of electronic subscriptions such as Lexis-Nexis and Westlaw, materials in CD-ROM format, audio and video collections, significant holdings of American and public international law and more. And because accessibility and expediency are high priorities, materials not available in our collection can be located and obtained using our extensive interlibrary loan service.

So, whether you require our services for your own legal research and writing, or to conduct a student workshop on legal researching techniques, we are available when you need us most.
